Discover how to serve and empower people in their time of need

Brought to you by the Centre for Leadership Development, Booth College of Mission

27 - 30 June 2017

At Booth College of Mission, Upper Hutt

Salvation Army chaplains meet New Zealanders every day in prisons, courts, Employment Plus centres, hospitals and the local community: anywhere people are looking for help and support. Chaplains get to minister with love, compassion and care—like Jesus with skin on.

You're invited to learn how to support and empower people in a time of need, how to access resources and support, and how to work collaboratively to help people transform their situations. You'll also meet other like-minded people and learn how to look after yourself as you serve.

» Most valuable, encouraging and empowering. Highly recommended! « Simon

Course content

With a week-long block course and hands-on assignments within your workplace, you'll be able to hone your skills to provide the highest level of service for your clients. The course covers:

- how to support and empower clients, including how to access a range of resources
- communication—how to build strong relationships with clients and colleagues
- a personal philosophy of chaplaincy in relation to The Salvation Army mission
- developing others to undertake pastoral care activities
- how to support people in their spiritual development
- culture as a factor in all human behaviour
- professionalism, safety and self-care.

» The information I gained will serve me well in my setting. Thank you! « Aileen

Who is it for?

This course is for Salvation Army chaplains and anyone interested in serving as a chaplain. If you're a member of a Salvation Army congregation and would like to attend, talk to your corps officer or the Booth College of Mission team.

» A very rewarding course which I look forward to putting into practice « Frank

Being there for people: Jesus with skin on

'I was once told that being a chaplain is like "being Jesus with skin on." I was with a young man who was holding onto his life by a thread after a vehicle accident. I was able to pray for him, and pray for the family that he wouldn't see again this side of eternity.'

Salvation Army chaplains often get to meet people at a point of need. Weddings, funerals, local emergencies and hospital visits—these are some of the times people will come into contact with a Salvation Army chaplain. Chaplains impact people with compassion and care.
